A reversal of the K'iche'-English Dictionary by

Introduction

Allen J. Christenson prepared the K'iche'-English Dictionary while conducting field work in highland Maya linguistics and ethnography from 1978-1985. He elicited his entries through collaboration with native K'iche' speakers in the communities of Momostenango (as well as its dependent aldeas of Canquixaja, Nimsitu, and Panca) and Totonicapan (and its dependent aldeas of Nimasak and Cerro de Oro). The dictionary is unpublished and is offered to FAMSI as a tool for research. It is available at:
http://www.famsi.org/mayawriting/dictionary/christenson/quidic_complete.pdf

In 2006, Richard Renner discovered the dictionary from the link at:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/K%27iche%27_language

He reversed Christenson's K'iche'-English Dictionary, separating the English definitions into separate entries, and then recombining identical English entries that came from different K'iche' entries. It is also offered as a tool for research, and also for those Guatemalans and North Americans who want to better understand each other.

Notes on usage:

1. As with any translation dictionary, it is best to check a word on both sides before using it. That is, if you look up an English word to find a K'iche' word with the same meaning, it is best to check that K'iche' word on Christenson's original K'iche'-English Dictionary. This is especially true for English homonyms (words with different unrelated meanings; or different words with the same spelling), such as duck, lead and spring.
2. Since this English-K'iche' Dictionary is a reversal, and not independently edited, it is best to review all the entries that start with the same word to find which one best suits a particular need. Also, some meanings are best captured in phrases, such as those that start with "act of", "be", "cut", "do", "get", "go", "half", "have", "in", "keep", "large", "leave", "make", "not", "on", "one", "open", "person", "piece", "place", "put", "small", "something", "sound of", "take", "very", "walk" and "well"
3. Christenson's dictionary contains a pronunciation guide. As the K'iche' language has 32 letters, it uses a number of sounds that are unfamiliar to English speakers. In particular, novices should be aware that letters followed by a tz'ut (written as an apostrophe) are different than letters without one. So ch and ch' are different letters of the alphabet. Words with "tz'ut" letters may have no relation to the same word written without the tz'ut. For example, corn, soaked corn kernels (n) tzi
and nixtamal (n) tzi
are unrelated to:
dog (n) tz'i'
The writer is unaware if either is related to:
disobedient (child) (adj) tz'i'
In any event, vegetarians may want to be especially careful about their pronunciation before ordering tzi.
4. I have tried to be consistent in using the typeset apostrophe (´), but through searchers may try searching twice, once with a typeset apostrophe, and once with the regular keyboard apostrophe ('). The difference is clearer in the Times New Roman font than in Arial. The apostrophes do not always copy and paste correctly.

5. Entries relating to corn, color, birds, earth, insect, snake, stone, tree and water, are copied into new entries that start with each of these words. So, by going to "corn," a reader can find 59 entries -- an obvious indicator of the importance of corn to K'iche' speaking people.
6. I welcome corrections and comments.
